raising in earnest. They have a new system this year. Instead of chipping in separately for national, state and county organizations you make a single contribution to a central finance committee which allocates receipts on the basis of estimated requirements. Donors have kicked in the past about the irritation of multiple solicitations and the party managers are trying to make giving as painless as possible. The New York County finance committee has a quota of $250,000 for 1935.

The tentative G.O.P. statement of aims used as a basis in seeking donations contains the following delicate touch: "We favor a return to the always-accepted principle of national finance, adequately described in the 1932 Democratic platform."

Omission

Wall Streeters who suspect something sinister in every Washington gesture are all excited because the Treasury's month-end statement for April—supposed to be a complete recapitulation of all direct Federal debt—makes no mention of the baby bonds sold in the last two months. Admittedly it's a minor item, but some sources would have you believe that the omission is the beginning of a dire plot to mislead the public as to the Treasury's true condition. If Mr. Morgenthau omits these figures again at the end of May they will believe the worst.

Unpledged

J. Edward Jones recently violated all Wall Street canons of caution in an advertisement announcing monthly incomes from his oil royalty trusts. It is customary for a financial advertiser who uses figures to hedge with a clause which says that the information is not guaranteed. Mr. Jones unhedged completely by saying "Information is taken from sources known to be reliable, the correctness assigned."

The boys didn't think that was clubby, but they were more amused than annoyed.

UNCOMMON SENSE

By JOHN BLAKE

When I stood on Bedloe's Island under the shadow of the Statue of Liberty and watched Wilbur Wright circle three times around that stately edifice, I felt that I had seen a miracle, which I had.

His machine was a flimsy looking affair—about a quarter of the size of the great flying ships that pass over my house every day—but it was a pioneer and marked the coming of a new age.

Today I learned that a new gyro has been developed which will ascend and descent almost in a straight line, thus enabling aviators to land on much smaller spaces than has ever been possible before.

There cannot be the least doubt that engineers will soon be able to make machines fly directly over a house or building, and drop upon them with as much ease and precision as do the pigeons which fly in its trail, wondering probably what kind of a new great bird it is.

This development is just another step in the man-made miracle of flight, and when we contemplate what startling things have been accomplished we wonder what the bird man will be able to do when he can make his machine rise or fall in direct line to and from the ground.

One also wonders what is to be the future of the new streamlined train and its terrific speed across the continent, if in the day of people now living planes can travel up and down in the air, moving faster than any train.

Imagine stepping out of a penthouse perched on a high building in New York City or Chicago, taking a seat in a contraption a quarter as large as a plane, climbing directly upward till an even current of air is encountered, and then darting off East or West, North or South.

The development of the new gyro promises that this will be done in the very near future.

As I consider this marvel of flight it occurs to me that it is about time that civilization catches up with mechanical progress.

Today the nations, which are feverishly constructing planes of new types, have chiefly in mind their use not in peace but in war.

And war, even though it employs science is not progress at all, but a continuation of the time when men think of the value of great winged machines for the harm they can do in dropping bombs on hostile populations and killing men, women and children by thousands.

I cannot believe that the Creator has bestowed brains on men and women in order that as soon as statesmen quarrel the business of slaying can go on bringing down destruction on the people of the earth.

If improved killing machines are the result of one of the longest steps forward that has been taken in our time, we have lost rather than gained by their invention and use.

However, the planes are good for something besides destruction, which is more than can be said of giant cannon and battleships.

raising in earnest. They have a new system this year. Instead of chipping in separately for national, state and county organizations you make a single contribution to a central finance committee which allocates receipts on the basis of estimated requirements. Donors have kicked in the past about the irritation of multiple solicitations and the party managers are trying to make giving as painless as possible. The New York County finance committee has a quota of $250,000 for 1935.

The tentative G.O.P. statement of aims used as a basis in seeking donations contains the following delicate touch: "We favor a return to the always-accepted principle of national finance, adequately described in the 1932 Democratic platform."

Omission

Wall Streeters who suspect something sinister in every Washington gesture are all excited because the Treasury's month-end statement for April—supposed to be a complete recapitulation of all direct Federal debt—makes no mention of the baby bonds sold in the last two months. Admittedly it's a minor item, but some sources would have you believe that the omission is the beginning of a dire plot to mislead the public as to the Treasury's true condition. If Mr. Morgenthau omits these figures again at the end of May they will believe the worst.

Unpledged

J. Edward Jones recently violated all Wall Street canons of caution in an advertisement announcing monthly incomes from his oil royalty trusts. It is customary for a financial advertiser who uses figures to hedge with a clause which says that the information is not guaranteed. Mr. Jones unhedged completely by saying "Information is taken from sources known to be reliable, the correctness assigned."

The boys didn't think that was clubby, but they were more amused than annoyed.

UNCOMMON SENSE

By JOHN BLAKE

When I stood on Bedloe's Island under the shadow of the Statue of Liberty and watched Wilbur Wright circle three times around that stately edifice, I felt that I had seen a miracle, which I had.

His machine was a flimsy looking affair—about a quarter of the size of the great flying ships that pass over my house every day—but it was a pioneer and marked the coming of a new age.

Today I learned that a new gyro has been developed which will ascend and descent almost in a straight line, thus enabling aviators to land on much smaller spaces than has ever been possible before.

There cannot be the least doubt that engineers will soon be able to make machines fly directly over a house or building, and drop upon them with as much ease and precision as do the pigeons which fly in its trail, wondering probably what kind of a new great bird it is.

This development is just another step in the man-made miracle of flight, and when we contemplate what startling things have been accomplished we wonder what the bird man will be able to do when he can make his machine rise or fall in direct line to and from the ground.

One also wonders what is to be the future of the new streamlined train and its terrific speed across the continent, if in the day of people now living planes can travel up and down in the air, moving faster than any train.

Imagine stepping out of a penthouse perched on a high building in New York City or Chicago, taking a seat in a contraption a quarter as large as a plane, climbing directly upward till an even current of air is encountered, and then darting off East or West, North or South.

The development of the new gyro promises that this will be done in the very near future.

As I consider this marvel of flight it occurs to me that it is about time that civilization catches up with mechanical progress.

Today the nations, which are feverishly constructing planes of new types, have chiefly in mind their use not in peace but in war.

And war, even though it employs science is not progress at all, but a continuation of the time when men think of the value of great winged machines for the harm they can do in dropping bombs on hostile populations and killing men, women and children by thousands.

I cannot believe that the Creator has bestowed brains on men and women in order that as soon as statesmen quarrel the business of slaying can go on bringing down destruction on the people of the earth.

If improved killing machines are the result of one of the longest steps forward that has been taken in our time, we have lost rather than gained by their invention and use.

However, the planes are good for something besides destruction, which is more than can be said of giant cannon and battleships.
